Call for submission of abstracts for the World Poultry Congress 2012

The submission period of scientific abstracts for the 24th World Poultry Congress (WPC 2012), to be held on August 5-9, 2012, in Salvador (BA), Brazil, is open.

The abstracts can be submitted for evaluation through the WPC 2012 website (www.wpc2012.com) until January 13. Submissions are opened to students, university and industry researchers, and professionals dedicated to poultry science.

“The 24th World Poultry Congress celebrates the centennial of the World’s Poultry Science Association (WPSA) and therefore, provides an unique opportunity to professionals and students of all over the world to participate, exchanging experiences and establishing cooperation among researchers,” states Dr. Edir Nepomuceno da Silva, president of WPC 2012.

The organizers of the WPC 2012 have divided the submission of abstracts in three categories:

Student Program: aimed at under-graduate and graduate students up to 30 years old. The objective is to provide young university students the opportunity to show their work in a major poultry event. The selected students will be provided with lodging and technical tour before the WPC 2012.

Young Scientist: aimed at students that recently obtained their M.Sc. or Ph.D. degrees up to 35 years old. The objective is to allow young researchers beginning their careers the opportunity for showing their work.

General (Scientist Program): Focused on researchers that do not fit in the above categories. The selected abstracts will be presented orally or as posters in the Convention Center of Salvador, where the WPC will be held. Further information on abstract submission is available at the WPC website.
